Because it alone issues

Because

At 4 o'clock on Monday morning flames appeared in the Pillsbury B flouring mill at Minneapolis, operated by C. A. Pillsbury & Co. They speedily extended to the Excelsior, the Minneapolis and the Empire mills, and the cotton factory of Dorville Morrison. Then they attacked a train of loaded freight cars, at which moment an explosion occurred in the Minneapolis mill, leveling the walls, killing three men and severely injuring others. Among those who lost their lives were Cornelius Fredericks, assistant chief engineer of the fire department, and a hook and ladder man named Tuhey. Windows ten blocks away were shattered to fragments. The Minneapolis mill had been shut down for some time, and the explosion may have resulted either from gas or flour dust. The mills destroyed represent one-tenth of the capacity of the city. The total loss is $416,500, and the insurance $507,175.
A NEW DEPARTURE IN CRIMINAL LAW.
We learned incidentally yesterday of what may be called a new departure in the trial of a criminal. At the recent November term of the Massac circuit court Judge Baker permitted the attorney for a prisoner, who was on trial for murder, to make the closing argument. This appeared to us so different from what we supposed to be the rule that we inquired particularly into the circumstances under which the decision was made. One Peter Burgess was being tried for murder. After the evidence for the prosecution was heard, showing a brutal murder, our informant states, the lawyer for the prisoner informed the court that he would introduce no evidence for his client; and that he demanded the right to open and close the argument in behalf of the prisoner; claiming that wherever the defendant introduced no evidence in his own defense, his attorney had the right to make the opening and closing speech to the jury.

The court yielded to the demand and permitted the attorney for the defendant in a murder trial, to make the opening and closing speech. If this decision is good law, and knowing the care which Judge Baker exercises in rendering his decisions, we will presume it is,—it will be another help to the unfortunate criminal classes, who think they are greatly persecuted. We had hoped the difficulty of convicting men indicted for murder would be lessened by a careful study of the law, but this decision of the judge seems to us to make another point in their favor.
